BLAZIN' RAILS

Years later, it's finally here — the first chunk of Philly's old Reading Railroad has opened to the public as The Rail Park. 4

5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

Built in 1890 and inactive since 1984, for years the Reading Railroad viaduct through the Trestletown, Chinatown and Callowhill sections of Philly has been a blighted piece of the landscape that attracted both artists and lowlifes. On Thursday it reopened as The Rail Park, a new park built atop the former tracks complete with giant swings and providing new, beautiful views of Philly. But designers say this is just the beginning. Read more on page 4 and on metrophilly.us.

COURT DISMISSES TRUMP 'APPRENTICE' APPEAL

1 New York state's highest court on Thursday rejected President Donald Trump's latest bid to avoid potentially having to answer questions under oath in a defamation lawsuit by a former contestant on his television show "The Apprentice." The state's Court of Appeals dismissed Trump's request to halt Summer Zervos' lawsuit for calling her a liar after she accused him of sexual misconduct. It said the underlying ruling from which Trump was appealing was not a final ruling, warranting the appeal's dismissal. Trump and his lawyer Marc Kasowitz have argued that the U.S. Constitution deprives state courts of jurisdiction over sitting presidents, and that Trump is immune from lawsuits over private conduct predating his entering the White House. Thursday's order marked the third time Trump failed to end Zervos' lawsuit or at least delay it until after he left office. Emily Thall, a spokeswoman for Kasowitz, said Thursday's order was on "purely procedural grounds" and did not address the merits of Trump's case. Mariann Wang, a lawyer for Zervos, said: "We look forward to continuing the discovery process and exposing the truth."

RUSSIAN POLICE TOLD TO KEEP LID ON BAD NEWS

2 Russia's interior ministry has ordered police to withhold negative news from the media during the World Cup and instead report successes such as crimes being solved, two police sources said on Thursday. A copy of the order, seen by Reuters, instructs police not to release any information about the results of investigations, police raids or other operations before July 25. The World Cup, which Russia is hosting for the first time, ends on July 15, and the Kremlin is keen to use the tournament, which opened on Thursday, to project a positive image of the country as welcoming and open. Russian police usually publish information regularly about crimes including robberies and murders, and also publicize the detention of everyone from suspected murderers to suspected Islamist militants. The interior ministry did not immediately respond to a request for comment. However, Vladimir Vorontsov, who represents the inter-regional police trade union, told Reuters the order was genuine and had been issued by the ministry.

REPORT REBUKES COMEY, BUT SAYS NO BIAS IN CLINTON EMAIL CASE

3 Former FBI Director James Comey made a "serious error of judgment" when he announced shortly before the 2016 U.S. presidential election that he was reopening an investigation into candidate Hillary Clinton's use of a private e-mail server, the Justice Department's internal watchdog said on Thursday.

But Inspector General Michael Horowitz also concluded in a long-awaited, 500-page report that Comey did not exhibit political bias or try to influence the election; nor did he contest the decision not to charge Clinton with a crime.

A long-serving law enforcement official, Comey became a controversial figure in the 2016 election, drawing accusations from both Republicans and Democrats that his handling of the probe into Clinton's emails influenced the campaign.

Comey later headed a separate investigation into alleged ties between President Donald Trump's campaign and Russia. Trump fired him as head of the FBI in May 2017, prompting the appointment of a special counsel now pursuing the Russia probe.

Both sides of the partisan divide found something to trumpet in the report. Democrats said it confirmed political bias but did not influence the Clinton investigation, while Republicans seized on a newly disclosed text by an FBI agent in mid-2016 expressing his apparent intention to "stop" the Trump campaign

And while embarrassing for the FBI, the report appeared to lack the kind of bombshell revelation that would significantly boost an effort by Trump and his allies to paint the FBI as corrupt and discredit the Russia investigation.

FBI Director Christopher Wray, right, told reporters at a briefing that he accepted the inspector general's report, but stressed it did not find that political bias had impacted its investigations.

"The report does identify errors of judgment, violations of, or even disregard for policy and decisions that at the very least, with the benefit of hindsight, were not the best choices," Wray said. "We need to hold ourselves accountable."

RARE AUDUBON 'BIRDS OF AMERICA' SELLS FOR $9.6M

4 A first edition of John James Audubon's "The Birds of America," one of the most celebrated books of natural history, sold for $9.65 million at auction in New York on Thursday, Christie's said. The richly illustrated 19th century book, featuring more than 400 hand-colored illustrations of 1,037 life-size birds, was one of just 13 complete sets thought to be remaining in private hands. Christie's described the set as "among the most superlative copies in private hands of the finest color-plate book ever produced." It said the price, paid by a buyer who wished to remain anonymous, was the second-highest sum paid for the book at auction. Another of the complete sets went for $10.27 million in 2010. Audubon's "The Birds of America" was first published as a series in sections between 1827 and 1838 and represented his years-long mission to find and paint all the known species of birds in North America. The book that was sold on Thursday was owned by U.S. businessman and naturist Carl W. Knobloch Jr., who died in 2016.

KELLOGG ISSUES HONEY SMACKS CEREAL RECALL

5 Kellogg Co. said on Thursday it is recalling an estimated 1.3 million cases of its Honey Smacks cereal from more than 30 U.S. states due to the potential for salmonella contamination, in the latest case of U.S. food products possibly tainted by the illness-causing bacteria. The U.S. Food & Drug Administration said it worked with Kellogg to issue the recall after preliminary evidence linked the product to more than 60 illnesses. "The FDA is working with the company to quickly remove this cereal from the marketplace," the agency said in a statement. The FDA said it has asked Kellogg to request that all retailers of the product immediately put up signs saying Honey Smacks cereal has been recalled and to remove the potentially contaminated product from shelves. The U.S. health regulator also said it is inspecting the facility that manufactures Honey Smacks. Kellogg earlier on Thursday said it launched an investigation with the third-party manufacturer that produces the cereal immediately after being contacted by the FDA and Centers for Disease Control and Prevention regarding reports of illnesses.

Philly man stalked NJ woman for a decade over high school grudge

Ronald Murphy was arrested for harassing former classmate who he said bullied him —30 years ago.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

A Philadelphia man allegedly obsessed with a woman he claims bullied him when they were high school classmates in the '80s is charged with stalking and harassing her for the past decade.

Ronald Murphy, 47, of the 2000 block of Wheatsheaf Lane, is detained in Burlington County Jail without bail on charges of fourth-degree stalking.

During the past decade, Murphy allegedly exacted revenge on the woman he perceived as a bully by sending her inappropriate gifts, including sex toys, cards and letters a few times a year, according to the Evesham Township, New Jersey, police department.

On May 18, the woman contacted Evesham Police to report that she had been stalked and harassed since 2009. She went to police complaining the activity had recently increased, with false Craigslist "personal ads" being posted in the "women seeking women" section that included her cellphone number. Gifts of a sexual nature had also begun to be left in her home mailbox at home and sent to her work address. Police said she had no idea who might be targeting her.

"It's something she's been dealing with for a long time, and finally brought to the authorities' attention."

Evesham Township Police Lt. Joseph Friel

With no other clues, detectives began serving internet sites and service providers with subpoenas to get records of some of the actions taken against the woman. After tracing one ad to an IP address at an apartment Murphy had rented, police identified a "possible suspect, a male who graduated high school with the victim in 1988," they said.

"It's something she's been dealing with for a long time, and finally brought to the authorities' attention," said Evesham Township Police Lt. Joseph Friel. "We were able to put it together pretty quickly, and it was someone she did not think of in any way as a suspect."

On June 11, police interviewed Murphy and charged him. The Courier Post reported that Murphy admitted to being responsible for all of the above behavior, and said he had a "hatred" for his female victim because he claimed she had bullied him in high school some 30 years ago.

"Someone definitely has some issues if they're carrying something that long," Friel said.

Murphy "was holding a grudge all this time," police told the South Jersey Courier Post.

He also admitted to driving past the woman's home about four times a month for years in attempts to see her. He also admitted to standing outside an "open house" where she was expected to be in another attempt to see her, according to the Courier Post.

Murphy could face up to 18 months in prison.

The Rail Park, built on blight, finally opens

Philly's Rail Park opened up a shining new version of one of the city's most storied yet formerly unkempt natural landmarks to the public.

Hundreds crowded onto Philadelphia's brand-new Rail Park, built on the century-old Reading Railroad viaduct, as it opened to the public for the first time on Thursday.

"The public will be overjoyed once they have the opportunity to explore this unique park and experience its breathtaking view, marvelous giant swings and beautiful landscaping," Philly Parks and Recreation Commissioner Katherine Ott Lovell said in a statement.

The new park has been in construction since 2016 on the former elevated railroad tracks that were known as a destination for artists and lowlifes in the Trestletown neighborhood.

On June 14, Phase 1 of the Rail Park opened — including the tracks from 13th and Noble Streets to Callowhill Street. The overall $10.8 million project will eventually stretch 3 miles.

The rebirth of the Rail Park first became a subject of serious study in 2010. The final design was settled upon in 2012.

The park's opening was actually moved earlier in April, after the Center City District (CCD) said it had determined it would be safe to preserve the original historic structure of the elevated tracks built in the 1800s for commuter and freight trains. CCD said renovating the 130-year-old railroad bridge, instead of demolishing and rebuilding it, would save $50 million and allow them to open the Rail Park a month earlier than expected. The Rail Park will also be subject to annual inspections.

"It has been a top priority of my administration to bring recreation opportunities and green space to all neighborhoods," Mayor Jim Kenney said in a statement. "Every community deserves to have vibrant, public spaces where everyone is welcomed. This park will not only help anchor Callowhill and the surrounding area, it will also serve as a stimulus for commercial and residential development in the neighborhood."

CCD said renovating the 130-year-old railroad bridge, instead of demolishing and rebuilding it, would save $50 million

Built in 1890, the Reading Railroad Viaduct saw its last train in 1984. "The viaduct rapidly succumbed to weeds and disrepair," CCD said. SEPTA in 1995 acquired the section of the viaduct converted into The Rail Park Phase 1. The land will now be owned by the city and maintained and managed by the Department of Parks & Recreation, the Friends of the Rail Park and the CCD.

Planners now have their eyes set on extending the Rail Park eastward to 9th and Fairmount, along tracks that currently still belong to Reading International.

"The Rail Park's Phase 1 is a proof-of-concept that will be used to advance the next phase of the project: the undeveloped area of the viaduct to the east of the Rail Park," CCD said.

NY AG sues Trump Foundation, alleging illegal use of charity funds for campaign, personal use

Barbara Underwood's lawsuit wants the president to be banned from most not-for-profit positions for 10 years.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New York Attorney General Barbara Underwood is suing the Donald J. Trump Foundation after an investigation by her office alleges that the company raised more than $2.8 million "in a manner designed to influence the 2016 presidential election."

The lawsuit, filed Thursday morning, names the foundation's board of directors as well, including President Donald Trump, Donald Trump Jr., Ivanka Trump and Eric Trump. Underwood asks that the Trump Foundation be dissolved and that Donald Trump be banned from holding the position of "director, officer or trustee" of any other New York not-for-profit organization for 10 years, and bar the members of the board of directors from the same for one year."

The lawsuit alleges a pattern of "persistent illegal conduct" spanning more than a decade, including unlawful political coordination with the Trump presidential campaign and repeated transactions meant to benefit Trump's personal and business interests — actions that violate state and federal law pertaining to charities.

Examples of these illegal actions, according to the lawsuit, include a $100,000 payment with funds from the nonprofit to settle legal claims against his Mar-a-Lago resort; $158,000 to settle legal claims against Trump National Golf Club; and $10,000 to purchase a painting of Trump that was displayed at the Trump National Doral in Miami.

None of the foundation's activities were approved by its board, according to the AG's investigation, meaning the board "existed in name only" and Trump "alone made all decisions related to the foundation." The board has not even met since 1999.

Concerning the Trump presidential campaign, the investigation found the foundation raised more than $2.8 million for Trump's run from the public via a televised fundraiser that Trump held in lieu of participating in the presidential primary debate in Iowa.

$2.8M

The AG's investigation found that the foundation raised more than $2.8 million from the public for Trump's run via a televised fundraiser.

The lawsuit seeks an order that would require Trump to reimburse the foundation for these self-dealing transactions, and to pay penalties that could total up to double the benefit Trump saw from these foundation funds.

Trump seemed to respond to the lawsuit via Twitter on Thursday morning, saying that the lawsuit was politically motivated by New York Democrats and former AG Eric Schneiderman "doing everything they can to sue me on a foundation that took in $18,800,000 and gave out to charity more money than it took in."

"I won't settle this case!" Trump tweeted.

WEEK 19: 6/11-6/17/18

Place your bets! New Jersey kicks off era of legalized sports betting

Gov. Phil Murphy got it started with bets on Germany and the New Jersey Devils.

With two $20 bets and a rambunctious crowd awaiting their turn, New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy placed the state's very first legal sports bets on Thursday, capping a years-long battle to end the ban on sports betting in the Garden State.

"This is a huge step forward for gaming, for the tracks, for the economy of this state," Murphy said before placing his bets, with a crowd of media swarming him as he stepped to the counter at Monmouth Park Racetrack.

Murphy's wagers — that Germany will win the World Cup and the New Jersey Devils will take home hockey's Stanley Cup next year — may not seem monumental.

But the beginning of legal sports betting in New Jersey likely paves the way for much of the rest of the United States to eventually regulate and tax it.

"If I'm gonna lose, at least it's going to a good cause."

Larry Cook

New Jersey voters agreed in 2011 to change the state's constitution to legalize sports betting, in part as an economic and revenue boost to the state's ailing horse racetracks and gambling hub Atlantic City.

State lawmakers quickly passed bills to legalize it, but professional sports leagues pushed back in court, arguing that it was illegal under the old federal law and that sports could be more easily corrupted due to increased money at stake.

But in May, the U.S. Supreme Court sided with New Jersey and overturned the 1992 law. Now West Virginia, Connecticut, Mississippi and New York are looking to bring sports wagering out of the shadows, with other states are likely to follow.

As Murphy placed the first official wagers, a crowd of hundreds, energized by finally being able to bet on their favorite teams, lined up eagerly at Monmouth Park.

They picked up forms listing the day's games for various sports and placed bets with clerks at one of at least a dozen counters at the $2 million sports betting parlor built by William Hill PLC's U.S. division. In an adjacent bar, the mostly male crowd that could place bets and grab a beer watched and cheered at televisions streaming golf, horse racing, baseball and soccer.

William Hill Sports Book CEO Joe Asher speaks as New Jersey Gov. Phil Murphy looks on as New Jersey welcomed sports betting on Thursday. GETTY IMAGES

Larry Cook, 47, was there to bet on baseball's New York Yankees. He said he already likes to gamble in Atlantic City, and enjoys sports, so being able to wager on the sports he already watches is a perfect melding of two worlds.

"If I'm gonna lose, at least it's going to a good cause," he said. He drove an hour to place his bet. But once sports betting launches at the Meadowlands Racetrack closer to home, he said he will go there instead. REUTERS

THE FOREMAN FORECAST: PARTY CRASHER

ANALYSIS

TOM FOREMAN

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

Forget all the old litmus tests for Republicans that once determined the merit of candidates; the questions about abortion rights, taxes, and ideology. These days only one question really matters: Are you for or against Donald Trump?

And some of the primary contests leading up to this fall's midterm election are proving the point. In South Carolina, Republican Katie Arrington attacked incumbent congressman, Mark Sanford, for his criticisms of the chief executive. "I'm running for Congress to get things done," one of her commercials said, "not to go on CNN and bash President Trump!" Trump tweeted his support for her just hours before the vote, and she walked away with the win.

In the Virginia Senate race, Corey Stewart's commercial proclaimed, "Want to stand with President Trump? There is only one choice." He too rode the Trump wave to victory and collected the president's congratulations, amid his controversial statement about Confederate memorials, the Confederate flag, and dealings with white supremacists.

Back in D.C., Speaker of the House Paul Ryan tried to brush off the results. "That's just what happens in contested primaries," he said. But polls suggest something else is at work. While about 40 percent of Americans approve of the president's performance, among Republicans Gallup has that number at more than double. Trump is working that to his advantage — savaging members of his own party over even slight critiques of his style or plans.

"We're in a strange place," Tennessee Sen. Bob Corker says. He argues his fellow Republican lawmakers are now so worried about the wrath of Trump voters, they won't even promote measures they want unless they know he's onboard. "It's almost become a cultish thing."

Are you for or against the president is the question Republican face these days. GETTY IMAGES

Whether Trump can turn his primary successes into midterm triumphs this fall remains very much in doubt. But for the moment, the winner's circle is filling with his allies and their message to the Republican old guard is get over it, get in line, and get used to it. Or as Kate Arrington told her cheering fans amid the victory celebration, "We are the party of President Donald J. Trump!"

George Anastasia, Philly's resident mob historian, will be presenting stories of Mafia alongside music of the era on June 15. PROVIDED

Mob chronicler moving to a new beat

Legendary local scribe George Anastasia tells mob tales, old and new, to music of the times.

A.D. AMOROSI

In his time as the mob's most vividly ardent chronicler, South Philadelphia-born author George Anastasia has penned the most definitive, and decidedly dramatic, newspaper features and non-fiction books on the hard truths, weird myths and blood-filled mirth of the Mafia.

"It's Americana," said Anastasia of the continuing epic that is the mob. "The Mafia has become a brand like anything else." Along with laughing about the truthfulness of the Jimmy Hoffa tale behind Martin Scorsese and Robert De Niro's "The Irishman" film ("Hollywood loves that unsolved crime story. … It doesn't matter what's real"), Anastasia knows well that all the world loves a bad guy.

Now, the man responsible for "Gotti Rules: The Story of John Alite, Junior Gotti, and the Demise of the American Mafia," and volumes on the Scarfo family ("Blood and Honor") and New Jersey capo Robert Previte ("The Last Gangster"), is giving his storytelling abilities an era-appropriate musical twist at Pitman Gallery & Art Center on June 15, with "Mobsters and the Songs They Love."

"I'm going to talk about the mob from the early days in New Orleans up through Chicago during Prohibition through which jazz was heard in the speakeasies of that time."
George Anastasia

Currently working on several concepts that he is not at liberty to discuss, Anastasia can always quench the thirst of those who crave an entrancing spin on the mob, as he avidly keeps track of all aspects and nationalities geared toward criminal group activity. Discussing everyone from the Russian to the Asian mobs in Philly, Anastasia said, pragmatically, that, the most potent crime organization in terms of making money "is one we're not even aware of," he said.

"The idea is to stay under the radar. The groups doing well — we shouldn't know what they're doing." Anastasia goes on to point out that the Philly mob's undoing came with any-and-all of its self-serving celebrity. "That didn't happen during the Angelo Bruno days. You couldn't do that."

Talking about Joey Merlino's recent success in avoiding a retrial in a racketeering case that ended with a hung jury in February, we agreed that though not made of Teflon, "Skinny Joey" is indeed coated in Armor-All.

"He did succeed here, and managed to dance away from many serious charges, but he's done his time in prison. He's paid a serious price. The Feds are always going to be on him."

Closer to home, however, is Anastasia's Pitman, New Jersey, event on June 15 with saxophonist Denis DiBlasio and guitarist Brian Betz that finds the author recounting the pulpy realities of the mob throughout the 20th Century with a soundtrack appropriate to each year he's discussing.

"Denis — my wife's cousin — had the idea for this. We hang out a lot, and one night we're out for dinner and stop at this art gallery near where we live He walks off, talks to the owner, next thing you know, he says, 'We got a gig.' Totally on the fly."

Without glamorizing the mob's ethos, the concept of "Mobsters and the Songs They Love" — in accordance with Professor DiBlasio's courses at Rowan University, is to fit music into historical and social context, and vice versa.

"I'm going to talk about the mob from the early days in New Orleans up through Chicago during Prohibition through which jazz was heard in the speakeasies of that time — these venues were a great starting place for some innovative music — before moving onto the mob making Las Vegas a platform, which is where the Rat Pack and that sound comes in, " said Anastasia of mixing the underworld of any given time period to the music of its era.

To make an even finer point, Anastasia recounts the time — his time — of growing up and vacationing at his grandmother's house in Atlantic City during the 1950s. "My parents thought nothing of giving me a dollar and telling me to hit the Boardwalk arcades. I'd always walk down Missouri Avenue past the 500 Club, Skinny D'Amato's place. When Sinatra or Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis was in town, there was a noticeable buzz. Sinatra's songs from that era — say "Fly Me to the Moon" — bring it all back for me."

Lest you think Anastasia is turning into a spoken word artist, think again, "Mobsters and the Songs They Love" is but a fascinating sideline for the author (even though he is considering bringing this to the larger stages of Roan U, if June 15 is successful).

"Look, some people — some Italians — think we're glamorizing the crime side of the heritage, and knocking them down because their names end in a vowel," Anastasia said. "I say any ethnic group that gave us Antonin Scalia and Camille Paglia in the same generation is doing all right, You have to know where you're coming from — the Mafia is the dark side of a bright story."

the GRUMBLE

Stop complaining and ENJOY THE WORLD CUP!

BY GREGORY J. WAKEMAN, METRO FILM EDITOR

Pat King
Grumble Editor

The World Cup is finally here! We here at the Grumble's undisclosed beach office thought we should have our very own film editor and soccer fanatic Gregory J. Wakeman make his best case to shake the indifference you may have toward this global tournament and let yourself enjoy it.

With the world seemingly falling apart at the seams, the World Cup has come around at the best possible time. Like every sport in its pomp, the joy and camaraderie it provokes just brings out the best in people. Not even the repeatedly corruptible folks over at FIFA can blight the glory that is the globe's most-watched competition, as politics, greed and corruption are put to one side the moment the referee's whistle twerps. Yesterday, Russia and Saudi Arabia's best 11 players ran, hurried and sweated out of honor and duty for their countries. Over the next few weeks their Spanish, German, Mexican, Iranian and South Korean equivalents are just some of the folks who will do the same. These games will be a timely reminder that there's so much more that unites rather than divides us, while keeping us enthralled throughout. And that's before we even get to the endless arguments over Messi and Ronaldo, the obligatory English penalty shootout defeat, and the excitement over USA hosting its own tournament, which has now been confirmed but is still excruciating eight years away.

TREATING GYM LOCKER ROOMS LIKE YOUR BATHROOM AT HOME

This habit that some people have disgusts me to no end. There are people at the gym that I go to a few times a week who don't seem to have any home training. I've noticed when I'm in the locker room that once in awhile I hear someone "clearing their nose" in the shower. You can't mistake the sound, a sharp hiss of a nostril projectile. They are doing this in a shower where other people go to wash up after a workout. I know that we as men sometime have gross habits, but to spray mucus in a public facility is beyond disgusting. These guys could just as easily grab a paper towel or piece of toilet paper and blow their nose. How difficult is that? The lack of consideration is what really angers me. Keep your nose bacteria to yourself!

Aries Arguments will not solve problems. If you want to find a solution, you will need to compromise. Don't give up on love, and nurture important relationships.

Taurus Extravagance can be expected. Deal with matters swiftly. Put a stop to anyone taking advantage of you, and don't try to impress someone who expects too much from you.

Gemini A business meeting or talk you have with a friend or relative will lead to surprising information. Get verification before you take action. Romance is highlighted.

Cancer Embrace your feelings to figure out the best way to deal with personal and partnership matters. A unique change or home setup looks promising.

Leo The changes you want to make should be put on hold. If you act impulsively, you will get in over your head. Stick to a strict budget and avoid making physical alterations.

Virgo Ease into whatever you want to do and pay close attention to detail. Your patience will pay off if you wait until you are fully prepared to present what you have to offer.

Libra You know what you want to see happen, but you'll have to jump through hoops to get the go-ahead. Refuse to let anyone control or pressure you.

Scorpio You'll be sidetracked by someone who is charismatic and pushy. Before you get in too deep, take a closer look at what's actually being offered. Empty promises are apparent.

Sagittarius Invest in your appearance and the skills and qualifications you need to reach your goals. Get firsthand information, and only do what's within your means.

Capricorn Make changes at home to better suit your current work and personal situation. Discuss your plans with the people most affected by the decisions you make. Offer incentives.

Aquarius Your involvement in social events or activities that include children will broaden your circle of friends. Stick to projects and events that will not damage your financial status

Pisces Creative accounting will help you get your personal finances in order. Money or a gift will come from an unusual source. Focus on quality, not on quantity. Romance is in the stars. EUGENIA LAST

Chris Hardwick's talk show series returns with special guest Donald Glover this weekend. AMC

'Talking with Chris Hardwick' returns with Donald Glover

AMC's "The Walking Dead"-less talk show returns on Sunday.

ANDREW HUSBAND

Chris Hardwick is a very busy man. The comedian left the "Nerdist" podcast and website earlier this year, rebranding the former as the "ID10T" podcast, but that doesn't mean he's taking a break. Instead, Hardwick is busily preparing a brand-new program for NBC titled "The Awesome Show." Meanwhile, he still hosts "Talking Dead" on AMC whenever new episodes of "The Walking Dead" and "Fear the Walking Dead" air.

Now that the zombie shows are on hiatus, Hardwick is bringing "Talking with Chris Hardwick" back with brand-new episodes. Sunday's episode features Childish Gambino himself, Donald Glover ("Solo: A Star Wars Story," "Atlanta"), who stops by to speak about his recent "Star Wars" role and Disney's upcoming live-action "Lion King" film.

Unlike "Talking Dead," "Talking with Chris Hardwick" focuses on whomever happens to be that evening's guest, regardless of whether they have anything to promote. Why? As the host has explained in previous interviews, he wants the experience to feel more like a podcast than a standard talk show.

Chris Hardwick

Judging by the 15 episodes AMC aired sporadically throughout 2017, "Talking with Chris Hardwick" has been a success. Sure, the occasional guest (or guests) will often come on to promote something anyway, as Bryan Cranston ("Breaking Bad") did with his 2016 memoir, "A Life in Parts." But not everyone who came to Hardwick's couch was there to sell something.

Cranston, for example, spent some of his episode discussing his time playing Dr. Tim Whatley on "Seinfeld." "Sons of Anarchy" star Charlie Hunnam revealed his iconic character, Jax Teller, was hugely popular among actual inmates, while Jane Lynch shared her favorite lines and memories from "Glee" with the audience.

And this is probably one of the most startling departures "Talking with Chris Hardwick" makes from typical late-night talk shows. Hardwick and his team go out of their way to include the live studio audience and the viewers at home, whether they're watching live or binging later, in what happens. It doesn't always make for the best television, but it's far more engaging than most.

Aside from Glover, the new season of the AMC series will include guest appearances by Chris Pratt, Karen Gillan, Bill Hader, Ethan Hawke, Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg.

"Talking with Chris Hardwick" returns with new episodes Sunday, June 17, at 11 p.m. on AMC.

Why did it take so long for 'Incredibles 2'?

"The Incredibles" sequel finally arrives in theaters this weekend. PIXAR

Writer and director Brad Bird reveals all.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
GregoryWakeman@metro.us

When it was released in 2004, "The Incredibles" made such an impression on the pop-culture landscape that a sequel seemed inevitable.

Not only did it gross over $633 million at the box office, it was met with widespread critical acclaim and won two Academy Awards. Most important, though, there were clearly plenty more stories to tell of the Parr family struggling to mix their secret identities as superheroes with their everyday lives.

Despite this success, writer and director Brad Bird recently told Metro that he was in no rush to get an "Incredibles" sequel out, while commending Pixar for having the exact same attitude.

"Obviously, when one film is successful there is very little resistance to a sequel," Bird says. "Pixar was very cool in saying, 'If you want to do a sequel to this ever, obviously we are ready to go.'

"What was cool was that they said, 'When you're ready, we're ready.' They didn't say it had to be done by a certain date," he adds. "Which is kind of a rare thing nowadays because money is usually put before everything else. But Pixar is a filmmaker centric place. That's one of the reasons I love working there."

Brad Bird took his time bringing the sequel to the big screen. GETTY IMAGES

It wasn't as though Bird was starved for plot ideas, though, because he had come up with the two main plot points for the sequel while working on the original.

"I'd love to tell you there was a sharp entry point for returning to the franchise," Bird says. "But the truth of the matter is that I had the core idea that Helen would get the assignment instead of Bob while we were promoting the first movie.

"Plus I also had the unexploded bomb of Jack-Jack having superpowers that the audience knew about but the family did not," he adds. "So I always had that in my back pocket, too."

Bird's return wasn't all plain sailing, though. "I had a few other notions that I knew I would have loved to see in a sequel," he says. "But the part that eluded me was the villain, superhero plot part. It took me a while to get something that I thought would be interesting and right."

"Finally I came up with an idea that I thought was cool," Bird explains. "I pitched it to Pixar while we were doing 'Tomorrowland.' They liked it, we started in motion on it and then, six months, in I realized that didn't work."

He went on to say that, with a release date set, "a team going, money is being spent, and, 'Holy crap! I am screwed.'"

Bird wouldn't go into detail about the aborted villain, except to say that it "involved artificial intelligence" and was a "cool idea" that might "pop up in another project."

But his decision to replace the foe clearly worked wonders, because once he had figured out the right idea to move "Incredibles 2" forward it immediately began to morph. So much so that Bird just couldn't stop writing.

"That part of the story kept morphing and I had to kill an enormous number of darlings," Bird says. "I have never on any film that I have done written so much that I have then cut. I probably have another two and a half other 'Incredibles' movies in terms of scenes that are just on the floor."

We'll just have to wait and see whether that's Bird's way of teasing "Incredibles 3," "4" and "5."

"Incredibles 2" opens in theaters June 15.

Why Glen Powell knew Zoey Deutch was perfect for 'Set It Up'

The Netflix rom-com had many different guises during its development.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Glen Powell first read the script for "Set It Up" three years ago, and he has been pining to make the romantic-comedy ever since.

Much has changed during this time, though. Powell and Emilia Clarke were originally supposed to be the two underpaid, overworked assistants that hatch a plan to match-make their two bosses so they can have some much-needed spare time. Instead, Clarke was called off to a galaxy far, far away for Han Solo. But rather than fretting, Powell explained to Metro that he immediately knew who to turn to.

"Zoey Deutch and I had worked on 'Everybody Wants Some' together. We really hit it off," Powell says. "We'd always talked about doing a rom-com together, because that was like the most no-brainer thing if you had seen the two of us in a room."

Powell is well aware that even though he might have originally suggested her, Deutch's charm, presence, comedic talent and patter was what really landed her the part of Harper.

"For any given role, it always takes a village to make the movie," he says. "In no way am I responsible for getting Zoey this movie. She is extremely talented. I was very vocal definitely about her being the right choice."

"No. 1 she was so perfect for the role, and No. 2 I had worked with her before, and I knew the chemistry was going to be there," Powell adds. "In a romantic-comedy, if the chemistry is not there you are dead in the water."

The chemistry was so free-flowing and apparent that shooting "Set It Up" sometimes "felt like a documentary" for Powell.

"Zoey and I literally fight and banter exactly in real life like it is in the movie," Powell says. "If it looks effortless, it is because it was effortless. We do fight like brother and sister in a great way. She is wonderful and I hope to do many more movies with her."

Powell was so aware of what Deutch was bringing to "Set It Up" that, after noticing how fun and optimistic her portrayal was, he decided to play off of that. He made Charlie much more cynical and apt to "operate out of fear and not making mistakes." Even though that's a role he doesn't usually play, he "thought it was very important for the movie.

"We worked with Claire to massage the script," Powell says. "That was really less about changing any of the stuff that made it great, but more about when me and Zoey were in the room together making sure the dialogue plays to all of our strengths comedically and emotionally."

"Set It Up" debuts on Netflix on June 15.

After a Twitter scandal that made the franchise a laughing stock in the NBA, the 76ers fired president of basketball operations Bryan Colangelo. Who could be his successor? Andy Jasner takes a look at a few possible candidates. GETTY IMAGES

The Sixers are in need of a new president after the Bryan Colangelo Twitter scandal.

sports@metro.us

The NBA Draft and free agency are looming. That's hardly a secret.

But for the Philadelphia 76ers, this is arguably the most important offseason in franchise history. After four Tank-a-thon seasons which produced 75 total wins, the Sixers finally broke through with 52 victories and a first round playoff series win over the Miami Heat before falling to the Boston Celtics in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Despite the momentum, controversy had been swirling after a report surfaced in The Ringer about secret Twitter accounts linked to President of Basketball Operations Bryan Colangelo. Following a lengthy investigation, Colangelo was dismissed from his front office role last week.

Suddenly, the Sixers are in need of a President as head coach Brett Brown assumes the position on an interim basis.

The timing is hardly ideal. Yet that's what the situation is in this bitter reality.

It's still a high-profile job through league circles and a replacement is needed.

Here are Metro's five top candidates to fill Colangelo's post:

DAVID GRIFFIN

The former general manager of the Cleveland Cavaliers from 2014-17 would be an obvious link to potential free agent LeBron James if he opts out of his contract. Griffin won a championship with the Cavaliers in '16 and has strong ties to James, which helps immensely. If the Sixers are able to sign James, they'll be automatic favorites in the Eastern Conference. James would be the perfect piece to guide the likes of Joel Embiid and Ben Simmons deeper in the playoffs. No executive is perfect and Griffin was a part of the group that selected Anthony Bennett with the No. 1 overall pick. He's currently out of the league and considered to already be one of the biggest busts in league history.

MIKE ZARREN

Zarren has learned the inner workings of the league with one of the best executives in Danny Ainge in Boston. The Sixers have been intrigued with Zarren for quite some time as they inquired about his services before hiring Sam Hinkie in 2013. Zarren is considered one of the up-and-coming executives in the league and would be a solid choice to come in to a franchise with a young and exciting roster.

MARC EVERSLEY

Eversley would be a terrific hire and the franchise wouldn't have to go outside to make it happen. He's currently the Sixers' Vice President of Player Personnel and has been a highly regarded part of the front office. He would seem to be an easy candidate to step in and not miss a beat with the franchise rebuild. It might be early in his career to take such a big step but it could be done without a major search.

JOE DUMARS

Dumars was a huge success with the Detroit Pistons for a number of years and won the Executive of the Year in 2002-03 and a championship the following season. He stepped down as President at the end of the '14 season with the Pistons. Dumars connects the past to the present, has a good working relationship with executives throughout the league and would step in with this franchise and have immediate respect. He should be considered.

DANNY FERRY

Ferry has worked with Brown in their San Antonio Spurs days. He had a rocky exit from the Atlanta Hawks when he was alleged to have read a racially insensitive scouting report about former player Luol Deng. Ferry's complete body of work has been solid and he's extremely knowledgeable about the NBA.

Shake Milton is not MCW 2.0

The Sixers worked out the former SMU point guard Monday at their practice facility.

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

The 2018 NBA Draft is only six days away and the Philadelphia 76ers are in a good spot with a multitude of draft picks. The Sixers have six selections in the draft (two in the first round, four in the second round).

With that type of ammo, the Sixers have a lot of flexibility in addressing various needs that plagued them this season.

In the first round, they will most likely be looking to target impact players that can step in now if need be. However, in round two, they could go after players who have tons of upside but do one thing really well to help the team.

One of those players who the Sixers might consider using a second-round pick on is former SMU point guard Shake Milton.

The first thing that stands out about Milton is that he is very tall for a point guard, standing at 6-foot-6.

In recent drafts, the Sixers have not been shy about drafting point guards over the 6-foot-5 threshold (e.g. Ben Simmons, Michael Carter-Williams). Unlike Ben Simmons, who was transformed into an NBA point guard, Carter-Williams came into the league as a pure point guard.

Even though he had size and the ability to get the rim at will, Carter-Williams' Achilles heel was shooting. This was an issue for him in college and in the NBA.

Throughout his four-year NBA career, the former Rookie of the Year award winner is shooting 36.6 percent from the field and 23.4 percent from distance. At Syracuse, Carter-Williams had similar shooting percentages from the field (39.8) and from three-point range (30.7).

SMU point guard Shake Milton could provide some depth in the 76ers' backcourt next season. GETTY IMAGES

The good news, however, is that Milton does not have the same shooting woes like Carter-Williams.

Over a three-year span at SMU, he shot 45.2 percent from the field and 42.7 percent from three-point range. This past season, the junior guard took his game to another level and averaged 18.0 points, 4.7 rebounds, and 4.4 assists in 36.4 minutes per game.

When you take a moment to view his highlights, you can see why Milton is a pro prospect. He plays under control on offense and can comfortably knock down a mid-range jump shot.

Whether he is driving to the basket or bringing the ball up the court, Milton gets to his spots like Golden State Warriors point guard Shaun Livingston and makes his shots.

The former SMU product also does a great job of creating for his teammates. Milton picked up a considerable amount of assists on PnRs either with his teammates rolling to the basket or popping out for a jump shot.

His effectiveness in the pick and roll bodes well with what the Sixers do on offense. In the playoffs, we saw Simmons and Joel Embiid run the PnR and it led to easy points in the paint.

Defensively, Milton's 6-foot-11 wingspan helps him close out on defenders and play the passing lanes. Last season, he averaged 1.4 steals a game and had a 100.4 DRtg (defensive rating).

Milton should be a solid defensive player in the NBA as he has the skills to guard multiple positions on the floor.

The former SMU guard would be a nice selection for the Sixers in the second round. The team has four picks, so why not shake things up in and come away with another draft night gem.

Kawhi-watch continues in Philly

What will happen with Kawhi Leonard? Is he staying in San Antonio or going somewhere else?

JOVAN ALFORD
jovan.alford@metro.us

This offseason is pivotal for the Philadelphia 76ers as they have a ton of cap space to acquire a superstar player. The Sixers finished the regular season with 52 wins and won a first-round playoff series against the Miami Heat, but the team could use that to acquire LeBron James, Paul George or Kawhi Leonard.

James and George will cost a hefty amount in free agency, while Leonard would have to be acquired in a trade.

Speaking of Leonard, the San Antonio Spurs forward missed most of the season with a debilitating quad injury, putting a strain between him and the front office. That strain led people to speculate that Leonard does not want to be in San Antonio anymore.

Therefore, the Spurs started to receive trade offers for the superstar forward, beginning with the Boston Celtics in February, according to ESPN's Adrian Wojnarowski. The Spurs obviously turned down the offer and have resisted trading him.

However, that has not stopped the Sixers and the Los Angeles Lakers from being interested in Leonard reports Wojnarowski. Both teams have the cap space and young pieces to make a trade for him.

Hypothetically, if the Sixers wanted to get it a deal done before or on draft night, they would have to give up a combination of the 10th overall pick, Robert Covington, and maybe Markelle Fultz.

As Kawhi Leonard's status with the San Antonio Spurs continues to be in question, fans in Philadelphia and Los Angeles are dreaming of acquiring him. GETTY IMAGES

Parting with Fultz plus the tenth pick could be hard for the Sixers because they would be giving away an unknown portion of their young talent to the Spurs.

Even though Fultz only played in 14 games this season, it is still too early to give up on him.

In addition to that, the Sixers would have to be sure Leonard would sign a long-term extension with them.

Potentially adding Leonard to a Sixers team with Joel Embiid, Ben Simmons and Dario Saric is a scary thought for the rest of the Eastern Conference. But him going to Los Angeles and possibly pairing up with James or George would make the Lakers instant contenders in the Western Conference.

As we get closer to the NBA draft and then to free agency, it will be interesting to see if the Leonard rumors quiet down or heat back up.
